Conscious Object emanates an elemental bleakness. Crafted from recycled aluminum and stripped of nearly all identifiers, each of the eight pieces asserts its function with stark clarity. A desk is unequivocally a desk. A bed is unequivocally a place for rest. Yet, within their pure whiteness, a sense of modularity prevails, offering infinite possibilities for their impact on space. Similar to the sustainability of milled aluminum, which can be reshaped into countless designs with minimal material loss, the pieces in Conscious Object inhabit a room with a haiku-like essence. Brevity and precision entwine in a stark proclamation of the present, enabling us to perceive things anew, every time.

Every piece is unique and is embossed with a unique serial number.

Philosophy & Bio

I think that magic powers are concealed in white. -Toyo Ito

In the realm of furniture design, I am propelled by an unwavering pursuit of white. A white transcending color's superficial veil, embodying stark purity in materiality, void of compromise or excess. Drawing from Minimalism's austere nuances, I design furniture evoking profound simplicity, hinting at new possibilities, while remaining unwaveringly committed to sustainability.

Within each pristine white piece, transformative power awaits beyond mere aesthetics. It stands as a canvas of pure geometry, urging users to confront raw space, stripped of distractions. My furniture serves as a poignant reminder of body-space dynamics, using simplicity to offer profound lucidity.

This truth isn't mere symbolism; it mirrors my dedication to sustainable practices, a solemn vow to environmental stewardship. Each piece embodies the union of beauty and sustainability in the bleakest of landscapes. Aluminum, infinitely recyclable with minimal loss, epitomizes this ethos.

Amidst a world of excess, my designs stand as solitary sentinels, evoking deep time and enduring processes. They whisper of cycles transcending our temporal grasp. As you welcome them into your spaces, they carry a legacy beyond design excellence – a reminder of universality amidst transient moments.
